

I'm in a conflict with Thomas McFadden over my negative review on Amazon.com of "Creation, Evolution, and Catholicism: A Discussion for Those Who Believe," which you reviewed positively. I started a conversation with him on the website <https://www.facebook.com/scienceandcatholicism/>

I did not read your review, but my guess is that you have the same problem McFadden has. I believe in Jesus for three reasons: historical Jesus, arguments for God's existence, and people who don't believe in life-after-death have character defects. Concerning this last point, non-believers are liars, ignorant, irrational, or stupid. McFadden only has two reasons because he simply disagrees with non-believers. He thinks they have a "materialist worldview" or a "naturalistic worldview." McFadden thinks he has better judgment than non-believers.
